Valentine's Day: Strong Couples for Strong Kids

By Cameron Thompson The Parenting Center Staff

Valentine's Day is approaching and love is in the air! Whether you are blissfully in love, committed to your long-term partner, or single and ready to mingle, we are all thinking about relationships. If you have children, consider starting a new tradition on Valentine's Day and celebrate and share this holiday with your children as well.

As a parent, here are some tips of including your children on this Valentine's Day:

- Moms, consider taking your son on a "date" to teach them how to properly treat a lady. Remember the word chivalry? It doesn't have to be a foreign concept for our youth boys. Have an open discussion and share with your son how important it is that women are to be valued and respected. Discuss about healthy boundaries and acceptable behavior in a romantic relationship. Moms you have a strong influence over your son and how you carry and present yourself, greatly affects how he sees women.
- Dads, consider taking your daughter on a "date" to show her how she should expect to be treated, like a lady. Girls, especially teenagers, need to feel empowered and know that a healthy relationship is free from hurt (emotionally and physically) and behaviors like that are unacceptable. It's important that you and your daughter talk about healthy boundaries, realistic expectations from a romantic relationship, and self-respect that she needs to have. Dads, shower your daughter with love, appreciation, and respect and she will expect the same from her future partners.
- The decorations, showering of gifts and affection can also include your kids! Bring out the markers, crayons, construction paper, stencils, and glitter. You've been warned, but the next few days you may have to explain to co-workers and friends why you're shedding glitter and leaving a trail. Get creative! The family can write down positive affirmations to each other and these notes can be shared on Valentine's Day or the days leading up to the holiday. What a great way to show your child(ren) how much you love them and encourage that feeling of being valued and worthy.
